

Triangle Game Conference Announces Call for Speakers

RALEIGH, N.C. — The Triangle Game Conference (TGC) has announced its call for submissions to present panel, lecture and roundtable sessions at TGC 2010. The call for submissions begins today, November 6, 2009, and will close Friday, December 18, 2010.

TGC is the leading East Coast event for developers and professionals working in the interactive entertainment and serious game industries. The inaugural 2009 conference featured more than 40 participating companies and over 700 attendees for the two-day conference. TGC returns this coming year on April 7-8, 2010 with more than twice as much space at the Marriott City Center and Raleigh Convention Center in Raleigh, North Carolina.

Speaker submissions are being accepted in the following five tracks: Game Development — Developers, producers and designers are invited to share the skills, techniques and best practices that today's game companies must cultivate to create immersive, engaging entertainment.

Engines & Middleware — The rapid evolution and competitive nature of immersive technology demands continuous improvement in platforms, tools and techniques. Technologists and developers highlight their innovations and share their insights in game technology, engines, tools and middleware.

Immersive Learning — Game companies, e-learning experts and educators discuss how serious games, virtual worlds, social networks and other immersive technology can be used to inspire, educate and train the "next-gen" workforce.

Business of Games — Publishers, producers and other game business professionals discuss industry trends, emerging business models, international business opportunities, the likely impact of the economic recession and other topics relevant to executives and studio owners small and large.

Games & Media — Thought leaders in the convergence of games and other immersive media lead discussions on games, social networks, games journalism, immersive media and innovative marketing. To submit a session, and for more information, please visit:
